Responsive Design Instruction Sheet

Website: Arizona Daily Wildcat, Home Page

This document provides instruction for the design of responsive snap and scale points for the website indicated. While the browser-width based movement of many elements are explicitly shown, some are not. If an element's movement is not indicated explicitly, elements will generally follow conventions established (for instance, conventions for repeated elements will be shown on the first instance of the element).

Please direct all questions to your immediate superior, who will in turn follow protocol for contacting the next available friendly website design engineer.

Common Conventions

1. Font sizes remain the same unless indicated.
2. Elements that are "full-width" (stretch beyond max-element borders to the browser edge) generally remain so and scale with browser width.
3. In general adding browser width on a desktop will simply add white space to the outer margins, while adding browser width on mobile will affect almost every element width. Elements transition to "full-bleed" through tablet views, and are therefore on those views are mixed.
4. Footers always only snap.

Key

Elements stretch to match browser width

Elements remain centered

Elements remain left-aligned

Elements remain right-aligned

Elements scale (with browser-width)

Element size snaps (from previous break-point)

Font size scales

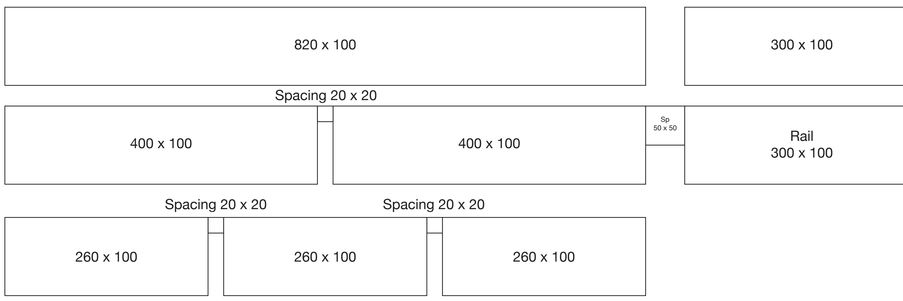
Font size snaps (from previous break-point)

Comments appear in cyan boxes.

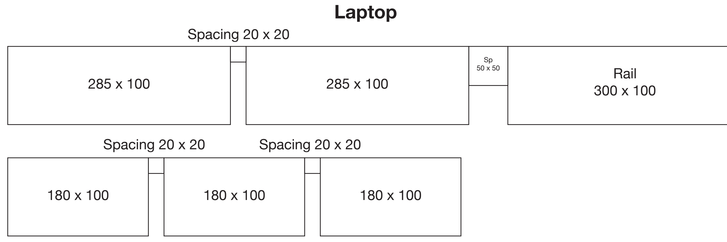
NOTE: The following grid parameters are from the wireframe template, are merely a suggestion, and may cause cross-browser stupidity if implimented exactly.

Column Spacing Template

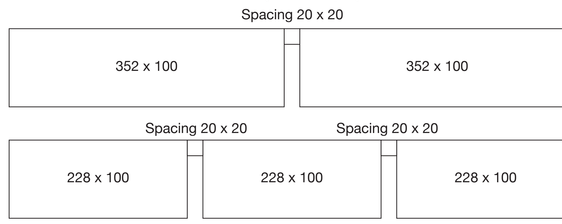
Desktop



Laptop



Tablet (Lanscape)



Minimum Browser Width: 1200px

Maximum Element Width: 1170px
